

One day you will realise that life is not about wearing designer clothes and attending lavish parties.

One day you will realise that life is not about traveling to exotic locations and staying in swanky hotels.

One day you will realise that life is not about having more money and driving bigger cars.

One day you will realise that life is not about going on dinner dates and partying with friends.

One day you will realise that life is not about having an important title or a higher position in your job.

One day you will realise that life is not about making new friends and connections but about staying loyal to the old ones.

One day you will realise that life is not about how many followers you have or how many copies your book sold.

One day you will realise that the truly rich people are not the ones with bigger houses but the ones with bigger hearts.

And then maybe you will understand what it is that I have always believed in and what it is that I have always wanted you to know.